And there is no opportunity for that long delay of analyzing and thinking back over the elementary drill. Now, the hearing child acquires the ability to interpret the sequence of sound that we call utterance long before he is able himself to produce those sequences of sound, and longer still before he is able to produce those arbitrary symbols which we have associated with the utterance of sound, in other words, writing or printing. The deaf child should follow the same sequence as the hearing child. He should be trained to interpret ideas from sequences of movement before he is able to produce those movements, and long before he is able to produce the arbitrary symbols which we call writing or printing. That this is possible, every one of you here...
